

Abstract

When application domain structure information is erroneously encoded into parameters for image processing and measurements the accuracy of the result can degrade. A structure-guided automatic alignment system for image processing receives an image input and application domain structure input and automatically creates an estimated structure output having improved alignment. Measurement and image processing robustness are improved.

CONFIDENTIAL